HOW THE SQUIRE WON HER.

From the New York Daily News. Squire Clover listened in silence, but with a quiet smile upon his lips, to his old cronies' yarns of their various haps and mishaps in their younger days in trying to get possession of the girl of their choice. But after they had all spoken he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, and, proceeding to refill it. said:

"Ay, neighbors, ye've told some pretty queer stories, but I'll warrant I can tell one that'll match 'em. I rather guess 'twould astonish those acquainted with my quiet, modest-looking wife, yonder, to know how it was that I thought of takin' her for better or worse."

"Now, David," expostulated Mrs. Clover, both reddening and smiling as she met her husband's quizzical look. "Why will you tell that silly story? If you hadn't cared to take me, you could have left me

"Ah, sure, it's easy talkin'," said the

"Ah, sure, it's easy talkin'," said the squire, shaking his head with demure gravity. But when a giri—an' especially sich a pretty one—files directly into a feilow's arms what else can he do? That's what I'd like to know!"

Mrs. Clover gathered up her work and ran sway, and her husband, after shaking his folly sides with silent laughter, gradually recovered himself and proceeded to satisfy the curiosity he had aroused, thus:
"I was a poor boy, as perhaps ye know, with nothin but a pair of stout arms an' broad shoulders to push my way in the world with.
"The summer I was "I be side with the curious of the summer I was "I was a poor by way in the world with.

The summer I was 21 I went to work "The summer I was 21 I went to work for Sue's father. Mr. Bean was a well-to-do farmer, and Sue his only child. He wasn't anyways stuck up about his property, but he set a great store by Sue, an' as he knew that some day she'd have as good a farm as there was in the country, naturally expected that the man who got her would be able to give as much as he took.

"So I had no more idea of ever bein'

"So I had no more idea of ever bein' Sue's husband than I had of flyin', an' yit the fust time I set eyes on her I knew, as well as I know now, that no other woman would ever be to me what she was.

"They were real nice sort of folks, who treated their help like their own family, an' I soon began to feel at home.

"All but with Sue; I couldn't seem to say two or three words to her without biunderin', an' was always doin' some awkward thing or other when I went nigh her.

"I don't think I'd have feit quite so shy if I'd have known her opinion of me, for I wasn't a bad-lookin' chap in my young days.

"I hadn't been to Mr. Bean's long afore I found out that Sue had a beau. His name was Silas Peterkin, son of the storekeeper down at the village.

"He was a white-faced, slim-waisted feller, with little hands an' feet, that I'd been ashamed to own, but which he seemed to feel mighty proud of."

"Sue never never.

feel mighty proud of.

"Sue never seemed to act as though she had any particlar likin' for Silas, but 'twas casy seen that the old folks set great store by him, an' was mighty pleasant at the idea of his steppin' up to their darter.

"So matters went on until September, when Mr. Bean give a huskin' party. We young fellers set to work with a will, an' afore sunset the corn was all husked an' piled away, an' the barn floor swept clean for the dance an' supper he was to have in the evening'.

for the dance an supper he was to have in the evening."

"Pretty soon the women folks began to flock in, but Sue was the prettiest of the hull lot, dressed in her white frock, with the pink ribbon tied around her waist.

"Silas Peterkin, he was there, of course, an' as soon as I see him I went to the house.

house.

"As I was standin' on the back steps, out of sorts with myself an' everybody eise, I heard a voice say:

"David"

"An' turnin' round I saw Sue, lookin' as smilin' as a basket of chips.

"'Ain't you comin' down to the barn?" says she.

says she.
"I ruther guess I ain't wanted, says I.
"Oh, yes, you are, says she; 'I want "'Oh, yes, you are, says sue, you."
"She looked an' spoke so sweet that I was enamost a mind to go. But just then I heard Silas callin' her, an' mutterin' somethin' about havin' some tools to grind, I walked off.

deal pleasanter to my ears than the fiddlin' that floated up from the barn down in the medder.

"It had been uncommonly hot for a number of days, but this had been the hottest one of all. There was a strange look to the sky, too; it was streaked overhead with purple an' vi'let, with a sort of yellow glare in the west.

"When I went to fodder the cattle, I found the poor critters huddled together in one corner of the yard, utterin' low bellows of terror an' dismay; their instincts warning them, as all these signs did me, of the tornado that was approachin'.

"Goin' back to the house, I shut every door an' winder.

"Then thinking' of the folks in the barn, I ran down through the garden toward the medder where it stood.

"But I had hardly gone two rods before it came—liftin' me off my feet an' hurlin' me against an opposite fence!

"I picked myself up an' hurried on. As I come in sight of the barn—or, ruther, where it once stood—the air was filled with dust an' flyin' shingles an' timber.

"As soon as it cleared away a bit, I saw Sue standin' in a most perilous position right in the midst of it! I shouted to her to come away, and just then the wind took her up, as if she was but a feather, bearin' her directly toward me. I opened my arms, an' she came right into them.

"As she did so one of the flyin' sticks hit one of my arms, makin' it useless, but holdin' her tight with the other. I took her to some low bushes in the little holler, between two hills.

"Sue escaped without a scratch. My arm was broken, but, considerin' who nursed me, you needn't waste any pity on me for that."
